radio silence

Carmen Aristegui, a fight for free speech.

a film by JULIANA FANJUL
Mexico City, November 2014, Carmen Aristegui, incorruptible journalist known for her free speech, reveals a case of corruption seriously tarnishing the reputation of the newly elected Mexican president. Three months later, on March 2015, the sentence falls: Carmen is fired from the radio station where she had worked for years. Supported by more than 18 million listeners, Carmen continues her fight with a couple of colleagues and derisory means.

Her goal: raising awareness and fighting against misinformation. The film tells the story of this quest, difficult and dangerous, but essential to the health of democracy. A story in which resistance becomes a form of survival.
“Utopia lies at the horizon. When I draw nearer by two steps, it retreats two steps. If I proceed ten steps forward, it swiftly slips ten steps ahead. No matter how far I go, I can never reach it. What, then, is the purpose of utopia? It is to cause us to advance.”

Eduardo Galeano
March 2015, due to political pressure and false pretenses, Carmen Aristegui, the main voice of independent journalism in Mexico, is fired with her team from MVS Radio station. The next day more, than 200,000 people demonstrate and sign a petition calling for her return on air and the end of censorship. Despite this exceptional mobilization, the station does not give way.

Who is this woman behind famous Mexican journalist? How did she become a popular figure of resistance and freedom of expression in Mexico? Who are her main enemies? Why is she still alive when dozens of her colleagues have been murdered in recent years and months? Does she find herself trapped in a role she did not want to endorse?

This documentary captures Carmen’s enduring and dangerous fight to recreate a space of freedom of speech and keep informing her listeners. In some other country this might be an easier task, but in Mexico, where social and economic situation is dominated by drug traffickers and political corruption, Carmen and her team have an uphill battle. Through testimonials, archive footage and social networks excerpts, we follow Carmen and her team in a large ongoing investigation conducted alongside the construction of her new internet radio station.

RADIO SILENCE immerses us in the fight of Carmen Aristegui, a woman inhabited by an extraordinary courage. A fight against monopolistic concentration of the media, against an authoritarian and corrupt political system, all in a climate undermined by threats and constant intimidation of drug traffickers.
director’s note

I came to Switzerland several years ago not only for my filmmaking studies, but also as an immigrant escaping the daily corruption and violence holding hostage my home country, Mexico. Although I was feeling safe in a peaceful Swiss socio-political reality, on the 13th of March 2015 I had a feeling that wave of injustice and violence crossed the Atlantic and overwhelmed my apartment in Geneva.

This news shocked me for two reasons. The voice of one of the last incorruptible journalists in my country was silenced, but I was also deprived of my right to unbiased and necessary information. A right I was sharing with an audience of over 18 millions of Mexican.

I was listening to Carmen on the radio for more than 20 years. Back when I was a teenager, Carmen already played an important role in shaping my identity as an independent woman and she opened my eyes for social injustice.

Once in Geneva, I continued to follow her daily broadcast, mainly to keep myself updated with the latest news from my country, but also as her speech questioned freedom in a broad sense. Her sudden silence first created a feeling of great loss, I was an orphan of truth. I was obsessively seeking answers to this arbitrary act.

During the following weeks I sank into a deep concern which went far beyond the Mexican context. Couple of months after finishing my first feature film, Muchachas (Visions du Réel, 2015), I transformed my anger into a creative impulse and decided to invest myself in writing this story.
Carmen Aristegui is a Mexican journalist and anchor-woman. She is widely regarded as one of Mexico’s leading journalist and opinion leader, best known for her critical investigations on the Mexican government.

In 2015, following her investigation on the “Casa Blanca” affair, Carmen was illegally fired from MVS Radio. This affair revealed the conflict of interest between the then Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto and a state contractor: in exchange of a luxury house, this contractor would be granted a huge railway contract from the government.

But Carmen Aristegui will not be silenced. With a team of dedicated journalist and using her own savings, she builds from scratch her own online morning TV station: Aristegui Noticias.

In parallel to her work, Carmen Aristegui has received multiple honors throughout her professional career. The most recent ones are:

- 2012 - Named Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor
- 2015 - Gabriel García Marquez Prize, for research on "The White House".
- 2016 - Chosen as one of BBC’s 100 Women
- 2016 - Knight Award - International Center for Journalists (USA)
- 2017 - Chosen as one of 50 "World’s greatest leaders" by Fortune magazine.
- 2018 - The John Peter and Anna Catherine Zenger Award for Press Freedom from the University of Arizona School of Journalism.
